Arson Suspected in Manchester

By Eric Reed

Arson is suspected in a fire at an apartment complex on Wellington Hill rd. The fire which started just after sunrise, quickly engulfed the building. When firefighters arrived on the scene the building was already too far gone to save, and they battled the flames for over an hour. Several people made it out of the building alive, and were treated by paramedics, the rest of the tenants are believed to have perished in the flames, bringing the total deaths up to six people including two children.

A preliminary investigation revealed that an accelerant was used, possibly gasoline, mixed with some other flammable chemicals. The quickness with which the fire spread suggested to police that it was professionally done, though they have yet to reveal if they have any suspects in the case.

Donations are currently being accepted at St. James Cathedral, for those displaced by the fire. Any who wish to assist the several families who have lost their homes are advised to go to the church. They are currently accepting clothing, food, as well as monetary donations.

Green Bandit Strikes Again

By Michelle Belanger

The notorious thief known as the Green Bandit has struck again. This time targeting Beacon Jewelers on Elm st. The Theft was discovered by store employees when they arrived to open the shop last Tuesday morning. They discovered upon opening that several pieces had been stolen, and the Green Bandit's calling card left sitting on the counter. They quickly called the police who examined the scene but could not figure out how they were stolen, and camera footage showed no sign of trespassing, and no fingerprints were discovered. This is the third such case in as many months, and police continue to be baffled by the thief and how they are committing these thefts.

2016 Primary Update

By Mike Gamgee

Donald Trump continues to gain ground as the 2016 primary season continues. Outpacing his rivals by a large margin Trump seems to be the obvious nominee for the Republican presidential candidate. His main rivals Ted Cruz and Marco Rubio are hanging on despite Trump's commanding lead. Trump seems unbeatable as his popularity soars with his policies on immigration and the economy being the forefront of his platform. Many Americans seem drawn to him, and his bold and honest manner of speech has struck a chord with people from all walks of life. On the Democratic side of things

If that is the case then Trump seems to be the clear winner in November as most polls show him with a commanding lead over Clinton. Clinton seems sure of her victory stating in a speech last Friday "I will not give up, I will not surrender. I have faith in the American people that they will choose the right candidate, the right person to lead this country. I have faith they will choose me."

No matter who the people choose November is likely to be an important turning point in American history.

DEAR SANDY

DEAR SANDY- This city seems to be going to S&%!, and I'm not sure what to do. Between the drugs, violence, and missing persons, there seems to be little reason to stay. My wife on the other hand won't budge on the subject. She was born and raised here and can't picture life outside Manchester. How can I convince her that this isn't a safe place to raise a family? -Anxious in Manchester.

DEAR ANXIOUS- No city is without its share of problems, and there is no guarantee that you will be happier elsewhere. You need to decide how much danger you are really in. Do you use drugs? In your neighborhood prone to violence? I would assess the situation and decide if the risks outweigh your wife's happiness as well as yours. Then make an informed decision.

Senator Bernie Sanders continues to struggle, despite shaking off accusations of his inappropriate behavior he not made much headway with his opponent Hillary Clinton continue to widen the gap of delegates between them. Sanders continues to push forward, refusing to give up, but despite this many in his campaign expect him to withdraw his candidacy by the end of the month.

ODD NEWS

CNN- An Oregon man has won the right to wear a "silly fox hat" in his driver's license photo.

According to a UPI.com report, the man, who goes by the name Bishop, said he wears the hat wherever he goes, and that the fox is a symbol of his spirit and part of his religion.

His driver's license application process was going fine until a state office worker thought Bishop was wearing "some silly hat," he said.

Bishop appealed the decision, which led to a nine-month court battle, which he ultimately won, the UPI story said.
